The Art of Teaching Young Children

When we talk about teaching as an art, it may be tempting to think that we are implying that teaching is something you have or you don't have, that it is an inborn talent, or a gift that is intuitive or natural. But this is not our view. When we talk of teaching as an expressive art, we see it is a practice in which we continually grow and develop. We see ourselves evolving as intentional reflective practitioner in the interpretive and expressive art of teaching young children. We embrace the transformational quality of teaching and acknowledge the power it holds to grow and nourish humans, including ourselves.
